Jail Visit

A jail visit was conducted for the students of Legal Awareness add on course in Mandoli Central Jail under the patronship of Delhi Legal Services Authority (South-East). The students assembled at Gate number 2 of the jail exhilarating immense excitement to experience the visit and know more about the jail. The visit started with an interactive communication with the Jail Superintendent of Central Jail No. 14 who explained that the ultimate aim of jailing a criminal is not punishment but reformation and he advised all the visitors to show compassion instead of disgust. He then went on to ask every student individually about their future plans. After knowing them he wished them all the best for their future. At last, he expressed that police has been trying since a long time to be people friendly but the things seem not to be improving. He said that any one in India would still be afraid to face any police officer today even when they are victims and not offenders.

The visit was coordinated by the Hon'ble Deputy Superintendent who was kind and humble enough to accompany the students for the whole visit period despite being busy and explained the students about every activity that went on in the prison. The students firstly went through a thorough physical checking by jail security personnel to ensure the following of jail's rules and regulations. The students then headed to the activity building that housed rooms facilitating education for the inmates where they can apply for IGNOU and senior secondary and secondary level certification and even learn basic computer operation. They are taught in the class rooms in this building. The inmate teachers are engaged to teach the students and books are also provided by the authorities. There was a legal redressal room where convicts or undertrials could seek advice from the advocates and poor inmates could also move applications through this mechanism. Another astonishing rooms were music rooms where an inmate named as Usman entertained everyone with his melodious songs and music and an art room where artist inmates made paintings which were worth appreciation and they even sold their work and became employed.

After this round, everyone assembled for tea at tea hall where the visitors were served with tea by inmates with immense love with cookies that were prepared in the bakery run inside the jail itself. The cookies were so delicious that the plate at the end of it were all empty.

Then the students visited the kitchen of the jail to see the process of preparation of food by the inmates themselves. They also tasted the food and praised it for its taste and the hygiene being taken care of while chopping the vegetables and cooking the food.

Then the visitors headed towards the factory area in the guiding company of Deputy Superintendent of The Jail who remained with the students till the end. There was a bakery that baked the same cookies that were fed to the students. The students tasted various other varieties of cookies prepared by inmates in the bakery. Then next was a unit that made benches for students that were prepared in the jail and then sold at half the price they are available in the market. There were inmate tailors who were stitching the dresses for some security agencies as they received its order from the agency. Another unit made led bulbs at a reasonable price. These units were operated under the name of Mandoli Jail. The Deputy Superintendent also told the students that the inmates are also paid as per their skill level and the hardship levels. In this way, the inmates are learning new skills so that they can start a new and reformed life when they are out after serving their sentence and they also earn something while being in prison that they can use.

At the end, the students were escorted to the gate by the Honourable Jail Deputy Superintendent with an advice, he said, “Try in your life to not do anything that would land you up here” where students understood its sarcastic tone but also an extremely valuable and meaningful advice.

The visit left students and accompanying staff including Programme Coordinator Dr. Meena Sharma and two other professors with a renewed image of the prisons in their mind. Earlier they had just imagination. The reality of the prison came out to be humongously different than what they had in their minds.
